The author is a practicing analyst and consulting psychologist, specializing in adjusting the individual to his environmental problems. In a previous work, How to psycho-analyze yourself, 1921, the author treated of the self-adjustment of the emotional disturbances which affect the well-being of the personality; in the present one he covers the principles which have to be observed if a person expects to become adjusted to his best vocational possibilities. The book is written in a popular, even colloquial vein, the writer having aimed at making the subject appealing to those in whose interests it should be of the greatest practical value.—Adv.

This, the third notable volume of broadside ballads collected and edited by Professor Rollins, assembles, from the Bodleian, the British museum, and the Manchester free Library, seventy-five ballads which constitute an important contribution not only to the political literature of the Great Rebellion but also to the religious and social literature of the time. A scholarly historical introduction of seventy-four pages, biographical and bibliographical headnotes for each ballad, textual notes, and elaborate indexes contribute much to the value of the work. The book has been beautifully produced by the printing house of William Edwin Rudge—the typography under the direction of Mr Bruce Rogers, the de luxe binding designed by Miss Diehl. The nineteen illustrations (including two double-page inserts) are reproductions of the original woodcuts from the broadsides.—Adv.

Problems in industrial accounting. O xix,643p $5 '23 Shaw, A. W. 23-12769
After a brief but comprehensive introduction to the principles and practices of cost accounting, this book presents for analysis and solution a wide variety of costing problems. Collected from business concerns in which they actually appeared, these problems show specifically the standard practices of modern cost accounting methods and technique. Some of the vital topics presented include: production control, handling and recording material, recording and distributing costs of labor, accumulation and distribution of burden, problems relating to cost systems and executive problems involving the use of cost data.—Adv.

Personnel management; principles, practices and point of view. O xii,643p $4 '23 Shaw, A. W.
In this new book the authors, with a wealth of experience from which to draw, have taken the basic principles of personnel administration, stripped them of the vagueness and uncertainty with which they are so often clothed and discussed them interestingly in terms of their practical applications to problems of management. Briefly, the authors trace the historical development of the personnel movement and the rise of the idea that a vital productive force lies in the proper utilization of the special aptitudes of individual workers. The methods, scientific tests and instruments employed by forward-thinking concerns in determining these special aptitudes and utilizing them to the best advantage in economical operation are described in detail. And, in addition, the authors have presented, in this volume, a graphic delineation of well set-up personnel control.—Adv.

Construction of new type transatlantic receiving sets. D 113p il 75c (4s) '22 Henley 22-16064
Listening to the high-power telegraph stations of England, France, Germany, Russia and Italy as well as those located in the Pacific Ocean and the oriental countries, is easier than most people imagine. The sending is very slow, a feature of assistance to the beginner in telegraphy. Several types of receiving sets for this task are described. Detectors, amplifiers, oscillators, etc., for long distance reception are also described. Suggestions for the operation of relays by the signals and the reproduction of them on a phonograph are given. In addition there is some valuable data on home made wavemeters for testing and experimenting.—Adv.

Construction of radio phone and telegraph receivers for beginners; solid, useful data, photos, and drawings prepared specially for the radio novice and experimenter on the erection of antennas, planning a station, and building all kinds of crystal, audion, and regenerative receivers, with amplifiers and loud speakers for radio telephone broadcast reception and telegraph signals. This volume tells in simplified form the how and why of radio apparatus.
The accomplished and experienced amateur as well as those of an experimental turn of mind, will find much information on experiments and tests which is of great value to them, while the novice will discover a wealth of information which will assist him in the designing, constructing and testing of this set, a special feature being a complete table of inductance capacity and frequency, corresponding to wave lengths of from 100 to 39,000 meters.—Adv.

Profit and safety are the essential elements in every desirable investment. So many investors, however, emphasize profit rather than safety. This is doubtless due to the fact that the thing uppermost in the investor's mind is the profit he will get. In this book the author shows, in a practical way, how you may eliminate the various hazards of investment so that, over a period of time, you can have reasonable safety and profit for every investment you make. Richmond; its people and its story. O xix,238p il $3.50 '23 Lippincott 23-17997
Possessing altogether unusual facilities in her own wide knowledge and that of her husband, the secretary of the Virginia historical society, the author has written a chronicle of Richmond, the historic center of the South, remarkable equally for accuracy and charm. With breadth of view and universal kindliness of spirit, she tells the story of her beloved city, makes us know those who have made it, what it is, and shows us by descriptions and illustrations its so numerous interests. An attractive feature of the volume is the great number of pictures never before published.—Adv.
